

London Bridge

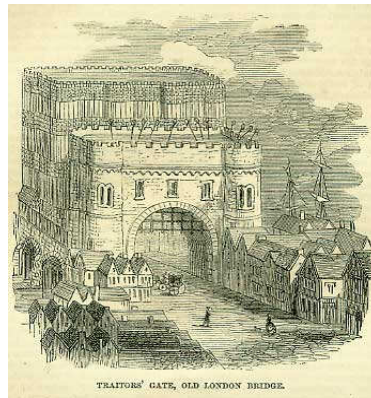

800th Anniversary

July 11th 2009, between 10am and 4pm.

Join the Guild of Educators for a display of mediaeval teaching.

Admission is FREE

London Bridge will be closed to traffic to allow business to take place as it would have been in 1209, the year London Bridge was opened. On display will be a range of demonstrations and exhibitions about the work of the mysteries, crafts and guilds of London.

The Guild of Educators is taking part with a demonstration of education in mediaeval times. Children will be taking lessons from our immediate Past-Master, David Taylor in Latin and calligraphy. There will also be lessons in Latin for the public so if you fancy having a go come along and put your name down on the list.

There will be opportunities to view and buy crafts from the many Worshipful Companies and Guilds that will be displaying their wares. Actors and entertainers 'of the period' will be there to amuse you and sheep will be driven across the bridge in honour of the ancient rights of Freemen.

Food and refreshments will be available for purchase.

It promises to be a unique and exciting day out so come along and join in the fun.
